People have focked to Temochi by nundreds and led on by the priest declared themselves against the government and so serious Diaz consider the movement sociers were sent over from that ' Guerrero to capture the leaders and Liserm the people. The first cetachment of troops entered Temochi wit nout resistance but soon fell under the influence of the priest and joined the revolutionary forces. A second detac ament was sent and upon arriving at the town were met by the revolutionists and a bloody battle was fought, in which twenty. regulars and nine rebels were killed and many wounded on either side,

The troops succeeded in capturing the town but the rebels escaped to Sonora, robbing and plundering a ong file route.

I ollowing closely upon this another bat; e was fought at Las A. mas in which therevand their commandant were killed and arms and ammunition captured and distributed among the revolutionists, who up to the time of the departure of the miner mentioned above still red possession of the town.

A few days later the federals and revolutionists and a sairmish at Veckery in which three of the latter were killed and a number captured. The loss to the government troops is not known, but it is thought to be larger than that sustained by the rebels who were fortified in adobe buildings and had advartage of position.

Taere was a touch of unexpected weakness in her voice and a look of pain in her eyes which was not unlike what Mrs. Bunker had seen and bitled in Marion. But they were the eyes of a woman who had humb ed her, and Mrs. Bunker would have been unworthy her sex it she had not felt a crue, enjoyment in it. Yes the cominance of the stranger was still so strong sae did not dare to refuse the proffered hand. She, however, simped the ring from our finger, and laid it in Mrs. Pairfax's palm.

"You can take that with you," she said; with a desperate attempt to imicare the other's previous indifference. "I shouldn't like to debrive you and your friend of the opportunity of making use origagain. As for my husband, I shall say nothing of you to him as long as you say nothing to him of me-which I suppose is what you mean."

The insolent look came back to Mrs. Pair ax's face. "I reckon yo're right," she said quiet y, putting the ring in her pocker, as she fixed her dark eyes on Mrs. Bunker, "and the ring may be of use again. Good by, Mrs. Bunker,"

She waved her franc carelessly, and turning away passed out of the house. A moment later the boat and its two occupants pushed out from the shore, and disappeared around the point.

Then Mrs. Bunker looked round the room and down upon her empty inger, and knew that it was the end of her cream. It was an over now-indeed. with the picture of that proud, inso ent woman before her she wondered it in nac ever begun! This was the woman she had allowed herself to think she the Mrs. Fairfax the officers had spoken of and who had made her - Mrs. Bun ver -ne go-between for their lovemaking! All the work that she nad done for him, the deceit she had practised on her husband, was to bring him and this woman together! And they both knew it, and had no doubt laughed at her and her nought now she had intended to go to Varion and imagined herse arriving perhaps to find that shameless woman a ready there. In her vague unformulated longings she had never before realized the degradation into which her foolish romance might lead her. She saw it now: that humiliating moral lesson we are all appite experience in the accidental display of our own particular vices in the person we have she had just fest in Mrs. Fairfax's presence. With it came the paralyzing fear of her husband's discovery of her secret. Secure as she had been in her dull belief that he had in some way wronged her by marrying her, she for the first time began to conor if this condoned the deceit sae had practised on him. The tribute Mrs. Fairfax had paid him—this appreciation of his integrity and honesty by an enemy and a woman like herse !-troubled her, frightened her, and filed her with her first lealousy! What if this woman should tell him all; what it she should make use of him as Marion had of her. Zephas was a strong northern partisan, out was he proof against the guileful charms of such a devil? She had never thought before of questioning his fide ity to her; she suddenly rememperec now some rough pleasantries of Captain Simmons in regard to the inconstancy of his calling. No! there was but one tains for her to do; she would make a clean preast to him; she would tell him everything she had done except the fatal fancy that compelled her to do it. She began to ook for his coming now with sternate hope and fear-with unabated impatience. The night that he should. have arrived Sassed slowly: morning came, but not Zephas. When the mist had littled she ran impatiently to the rocas, and gazed anxiously toward the lower pay. There were a few gray sails scarce distinguishao e above the grayer water, out mey were not his. She glanced half mechanically seaward, and her eyes became suddenly fixed. There. was no mistake. She knew the riz. She could see the familiar white ap streak as the vessel careened on the starboard slowly creeping out of the Golden Gate.
